Jochen Cals is a General Practitioner and Professor at the Department of Family Medicine, with his research embedded in the research programme Optimising Patient Care within the Care and Public Health Research Institute (CAPHRI) at Maastricht University, the Netherlands. His research focusses on Effective diagnostic testing in general practice. He has published work in The Lancet, BMJ, JAMA and Annals of Family Medicine. He has a particular interest in scientific writing, and is section editor at Nederlands Tijdschrift voor Geneeskunde. Beyond his love for scientific writing he writes a newspaper column for the Maastricht University newspaper Observant. While he is amazed by the creativity of science, he finds most inspiration while working in daily general practice in his own practice in Sittard. He spends half of his week working clinically and the other half working in academia.
